

DRAGOȘ ILINCA, PHD is Head of Military History Branch of Institute for Political Studies on Defence and Military History, since 2016.

He graduated History Faculty at the Bucharest University in 1997 having specialisation in International Contemporary History with a focus on Middle Eastern history in XX century. In 1998 started his career in Romanian Ministry of National Defence and held several lead positions in defence policy and international military relations domains. Also, fulfilled two duty tours in Defence Section of Permanent Delegation of Romania to NATO, Brussels, Belgium.

Since 2010 obtained a PhD in military sciences and intelligence at National Defence University “Carol I”. His research activity includes significant number of articles and studies in the field of international relations, defence policy and military history published in Romania and abroad. Is single-author of three books on Middle East history and European cooperation in the field of security and defence. He graduates different postgraduate and specialization programs conducted by national institutions as well as EU and NATO.

The main areas of interests are NATO history during Cold War, geopolitical evolutions in the Middle East during XX century, development of European defence and EU role in the crisis management.